

David Allen has worked at NIST for over 20 years. Earlier work included radiometric calibration and establishing, maintaining and improving national scales of reflectance and transmittance as a project leader in the NIST spectrophotometry program. Current research interests include advancing hyperspectral imaging for critical applications related to medicine, defense, and the environment.